MUST NOT STAY OUT LATE.

Herman Iglow, thirty-eight years of ige, a jeweller, of No. 239 east Eightyseventh street, stood before Magistrate Mott in the Harlem Police Court Wednesday afternoon, his knees snaking and trembling. Iglow is an unders zad man and was well-dressed and apparently prosperous. Beside him stood a tail woman with black bair and flashing black eyes that sparkled through glasses. She was Mrs. Catharine Iglow. The couple have been married tea years, and during that period Iglow has never remained out later than 10 o'clock. He belongs to a lodge in which on Monday night there was an installation of officers, among whom was Iglow, and the honor of being inducted into office made him careless or the feast that followed caused him to forget him self. At all events he did not snow up at his home until the "wee sma"?

Mrs. Iglow went before Magistrate Mott Wednesday morning and swore out a warrant for the arrest of her husband for non support. Then she went home and found her husband, who repented his rashness, doing some house hold duty. He was contrite and pleaded nard for forgiveness, but his wife told him to put on his hat and coat and come with her. Than she took him to the Harlem Police Court. Magistrate Moti was not on the bench.

"Here is my husband," said Mrs. Iglow to Sergeant Lovell. "He's been real nice this morning, and I want to have his case dismissed. He's prom sed me that he never, never, never will stay out late again any more."
"Yes," said Herman, meekly. "I'll never stay out late any more."

"How about this charge of non-sup port?" asked Lovell.

"He supports me all right. That is, he gives me from $4 to $8 some days nd some days he doesn't give me anything. I wish it came in regular, but that is all right."

"I'll have to keep him. He's my prisoner now," said Sergeant Lovell. "I have to take him before the judge, and see what he says about it."

Shortly afterward Iglow was at-

Mr. and Mrs. Iglow left the courtoom arm in arm. -[N. Y. Herald. REMARKABLE FOX YARN.

A friend at Hillsboro sends us an in eresting account of a fox chase which ook place in that vicinity on Monday last, which arrived too late for publiestion in full. It appears that on the morning stated two members of the typestisnd Fox Club went out for a use, having with them three hounds and a pug dog. They were not long in tarting a fox, and as the hounds foiwed in hot pursuit the pug to the assument of all fell in line and push the trail with the same vigor as the hounds. The chase was a hot and exciting one and continued for over an hour. Finally the fox was cornered with no avenue of escape. With the cunning of his kind when the hounds rushed in on him the fox bounded in the air allowing the hounds to pass on. But Mr. Fox's trick did not work successfully, for he had scarcely touched the ground before the gallant little pug, which was in the rear, was upon him.
